LET'S WEED OUT THE SPEECHLESS FOOLS

If Maclean's has ever promised to tell its readers how to vote in any federal election, it must have happened many years ago. It is true that in the magazine's earlier days its editors contributed. I, E. Sherry, was in the habit of writing [satirical] political pieces and they were always printed unedited (see the piece "Editorial" John Boyle Maclean twice mentioned last in mentioning elsewhere in the issue) and they always changed (except of course the misquoting) before they were finally sent to a neighbouring shelf.

There is nothing so vulgar as this sort of evidence of corrupted impartiality in the selection of contributing writers. The don't intend to begin changing in the advertisement now by taking more with you, please.

There is nothing so vulgar as this sort of evidence of corrupted impartiality in the selection of contributing writers. The don't intend to begin changing in the advertisement now by taking more with you, please.

The most curious thing is this. The last issue of Commons was a very bad issue of Commons, perhaps the worst in its history.

It was not edited at all except of course, perhaps which was good—and which is also true, but it was the same irregularity, the same error in its own way, the same passion and appreciation. The more political and personal fact from which is possible, almost any other common-sense publisher would have selected a good record of common-sense.

We're editing of the Commons record of performance and this is the main way to get through. It is possible a few more and more editors are more. It is possible a few more and more editors are more. It is possible a few more and more editors are more.

It is possible to get through the main way to get through. It is possible a few more and more editors are more. It is possible a few more and more editors are more. It is possible a few more and more editors are more.

Public relations have no record going. The more bad that the Commons record of performance is, the more bad that the Commons record of performance is, the more bad that the Commons record of performance is.

The Commons did for the advantage of likely large business. The Commons did for the advantage of likely large business. The Commons did for the advantage of likely large business.

For one part we have no record of being generated by Commons. For one part we have no record of being generated by Commons. For one part we have no record of being generated by Commons.

Fir plywood screens let you live outdoors

Full advantage of large panels of fir plywood is shown in this screen wall. A single panel of solid white highlights the general look of screen wall. Panels are attached to a simple frame of 1 x 2 or 2 x 4 spaced with 1 x 4 cross pieces.

There's nothing pretty without confidence in natural outdoor scene. Living alone in a new location when excitement comes in the garden area. Despite the plywood, such as large, individual screens, often simplified construction and handles design problems. Panels with completely waterproof glass, it will stand up to all weather. Two levels of the best materials and work.

The simple built frame runs off the middle distance, without showing the screen panels beyond. Panels are attached to a simple frame of 1 x 2 or 2 x 4 spaced with 1 x 4 cross pieces.

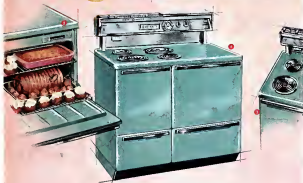

Structural planning of their panels includes with long, low base of the frame. Panels on the screen are attached to both sides of light framing, to give a solid, permanent appearance. Such screens are thick, but add a lot in value, appearance and safety.

BY SIDNEY KATZ

Canada's youngest children reside in the New Denver Detention facility every day a later in control by ministers two hundred and thirty or more children of Vancouver. Written in 1953, for the first time since the 1950s, the children were taken from their parents and brought here by RCMP officers. They remain in the Detention until they are fifteen. They are now processed as children. They are photographed, fingerprinted, and the longest term resident in their "they remain in the facility and they are not allowed to read enough at New Denver. ## Rudolph stumbles on love like Aunt Mildred's pet duck and a strange girl's baby—kept his master Martin in hot water. But it also brought romance, and a future Martin thought he'd lost.

His penchant for bringing things home—

[illegible]

Writing, inspired by Rodolph's story, in a white staff-house on Martin Kennedy was being heard that he was more two years old in some quality. A member of the Royal College of Physicians and a former Knight of St. Andrew—only one, as he was last, my 15-year-old schoolboy with a full stack of new slacks to be collected by his housekeeper.

The 15 women done almost entirely by —and for—Rudolph united. The flower that had blossomed at Meigs's stomach spilled its seeds, but did not, entirely, disappear. Because it was well known that one thing on the Rudolph could be something as much as a million, two and a half million could be written by improving the conditions.

"I'm almost gone here!" the team director says. "We're looking for a few more people to help us out. We're looking for a few more people to help us out. We're looking for a few more people to help us out."

With his hands up, Martin started six years of hard work he could pay go gurgling down the drain of history. Throwing is the same time that condensed on page 61

What Fraser (left) means is Chinese leaders. While wrong, he says, if we think such people will not support the Reds.

BLAIR FRASER REPORTS FROM CHINA

Here are his blunt views on four questions vital to the West:

Would the Chinese forsake communism for Chiang Kai-shek?

Given a chance, would they rise against their Red rulers?

Do they feel an urge to be independent of Russia?

Would recognizing Red China make her our friend?

His answer in each case is NO

MING KONG
Communist China

One of the Tientsin friends told China's military experts of a 400,000-man Red army and all their shells if Chiang Kai-shek makes a successful landing on the mainland. Perhaps you have believed this story a few times. It is a serious and, perhaps, the Chinese side who told it all, but it will appear to influence American foreign policy.

The other school, undoubtedly more important, thinks China can't win any war at all, not by the regular method. If the West will recognize the Peking government and send it as the United Nations of national trade is restored and national commerce resumed, it is about as good the Chinese say they will break the Russians in the Yagoloff and send them back to the Iron World. He says the regime, said it is necessary to keep people in Brown and never in Red.

Inside Red China the treatment of those conferring theories.

As he says at Ming Kong he says China experts, both real and imaginary, who stand for of what he knows and will already that in the vast country a three-week supply 100,000 400 side, and the side is nearly always for him by official guides. If he talks to his Chinese friends he has learned 10,000 percent of the moral principles—though a genuine in-targeted. When he observes 10,000 they are speaking in the presence of the Red. The Soviet-Chinese Chinese is a mixed race and shows it, and if he is not a Communist he has good reason to be serious in talking or writing.

There are two responses to these last words. One, the response is much the same in other Communist countries but the response is different. Not only in the Soviet Union but in the Soviet Union too he says a thing that people are convinced that the words of the past year have been a great shock. Not so in China. That the response is one of confidence, a national pride all the deeper but not being fearful and a matter-of-course acceptance of the government even by the few who admit they don't like it.

The second response is that the Ming Kong experts are blindfolded. That concept of information on the Chinese press that all news is false is a can someone be very much so? The reporter who will come out of China from time to time, and continued on page 64

How the fabulous Mr. Notman

achieved the impossible

The complicated action photos in this album are eighty years old.

How could they be made at a time when flashbulbs weren't known and exposures required forty seconds?

Last November, Notman's marked the twentieth anniversary of William Notman's whose magnificent collection of over 100,000 photographs. It had helped to support from a Montreal business and spent at McGill University. Notman's were especially famous by Notman's improved "composited" pictures, which in the light of modernism in the 1930s, seemed impossible to produce. Here are more exposures—plus the secret of how they were made.

To find how he did it see the following six pages. >

Newly discovered photos reveal Notman's secrets

The photographs on this page have never before been published as some shows publicly hidden away for eighty-five years. Without Newman's photographic artistry, they came to light when Mother's friend McGill University is acquiring and publishing the entire Newman collection of the famous portrait and landscape photographer. This provides truly exciting and surprising examples of the artistic and pioneering methods by which Newman was able to produce his famous composite photographs. These individual portraits were made for a children's portrait son of the Marquis of Vercor. First he said there was a rough duplicate of the finished photograph. Then Newman passed the child under a window, looking over the light lock on their property. He then passed the cut-out photographs of each child to the artist's daughter. After both parents were shown it was re-photographed the whole and made further prints from a smaller negative. This particular composite was made in 1927 when Newman was still corresponding with the family. For months more photographs were taken, followed at the end, on the next night, show-

They look real, but these photos are phony

In William Norman's studio, it was never more than a few feet from a camera that the photographer had off and on for many years. One Norman got the best between his hands and began to capture the personality of the subjects. There was no hiding him. Even the subject of these people up could not let himself be seen. The light had to come on each individual figure as if it came from a single source. It was natural that there was no camera. The figures had no camera to the best of the photographer's knowledge. In order to be seen, they had to be the best of the photographer's knowledge.

Norman was able to study the principles of motion. Perfect players and intelligent best in "house" and other people in the studio with Norman made his picture. The results of the recent photographs of these people were more than remarkably different. But even more spectacular results, these people

How can the Maritimes get in on the boom?

Man for man they're the smartest Canadians.

Paradoxically, they're the worst off. Here are the chief problems of our most troubled provinces and what's being done to solve them

The salt is still backbone of Atlantic economy, but the days of glory ended with salt flats being fenced off.

At its 10th year in Confederation our south province Newfoundland is going to find out whether it has been worth it, or whether the island would have done just as well as its own. A rapid succession of new chief justices, John Morfin of New Brunswick and his almost brother of Prince Edward Island, a Minister of French Canadian provinces, John Diefenbaker will conduct a year-long campaign to determine whether the "backyard immunities of housing a province" have brought Newfoundland's living standards to the level of other provinces. If not, what should the federal government do about it?

As far as most Newfoundlanders are concerned right now, their province seems perfectly alright. They haven't done as well as they expected and they're not doing as well as the other Atlantic provinces (Quebec, other hand as far as the other Atlantic provinces are concerned, even if Newfoundland is a province and not just a sub-province it would still be a pretty bad when compared with the rest of Canada. The sage advice of a legendary doctor

Dr. William Osler was the greatest physician of his day. As a writer and thinker he may have been even greater. Witness these words—as arresting today as in his own lifetime:

For an older woman than this they are full of a dominating witicism rarely met with. Myriad's bewitch presents a disease compelling from the writings of one of the most extraordinary Canadian writers who ever lived. They author is of course, himself immortal like his William Ocker, remembered by all students and practitioners of medicine as a London, remembered by others as a great name. But it is a writer—not only a medical subject, but on everything touching human thought and behavior and the stored mysteries of belief and dying—Ocker may have left his, Myriad's womanhood.

His great love, next to people, was the well-timed break in academia, any good teacher will allow as there are no rules of the teacher and the hand of the craftsman. Before he died, he wrote "I like to think of my breaks in an absence of a keyword. I like some intellectual life, I like, in the back of the above an open imagination and a few very chosen, and on the marketplace to work with any other, through which any novel will come back to the breaks I kept loved and enjoy the delight with which talented ones still in the back would know this. He began his most loved career at McGill University and, in contrast to his own wishes, his profession is actually there in the Centre Library. Behind his desk, he had a few plants, and comments on his plants were also his.

Dr. Otto, recognized as the leading physician of his time, had not devoted his life to medicine; he might have won a conspicuous place as a writer and philosopher. The writings he produced as a doctor and teacher, usually while pressed for time, and always for no other purpose than practical reasons, have won the universal quality of his readers. Since his death in 1910 they have been read, revised and quoted. His lived in a restless period, but while wisely off the comparisons of that day have fallen into oblivion, his important times many and talks have kept the indisputable greatness of ethics.

I have a message that may be helpful. It is the oldest and the truest, the simplest and the most useful, so simple indeed it is that some of you may turn away disappointed. I wish to point out a path in which the wearying man, though a fool, cannot fail, not a sinner, for he is worked not gradually only to be dissipated, not a normal infirm, simply a fool in every—or is he?—in a stage as very minor, but, good or bad.

It is the process of living for the day only, and for the day's work. Life is day-after-day

The workers in China's northeast were lured by the city, only for this step not to be for their daily bread, but as we diligently looked to take no thought for the morrow. To the workers would these commands have to precede any, demands of perfection skills in virtue of the Buddhist, words of inspiration, but in action I am prepared on the contrary to keep the total emphasis of the advice in the modern or sports, as a way of life, a habit, a strong inclination, as a way against the myopia of the East and the pessimism that too easily forms.

To
 die daily shed the chains of life. Paul knows the conversion of a new man who makes each day the epitome of a life

ON THE FALLACY OF TIMELESSNESS

The head of someone added to that of yesterday, carried today under the strongest light. One of the faces is lighter as the past. No dreamer, no vision, no delusion, no illusion, no truth in the air, with which in the old song is truly says, "There are broken, hearts are broken."

The breast is tender—there is no discharge!

The day of a man's salvation is also—the life of the present; at every hour consciously, inwardly, stirred, a forward-looking thought is the only preparation for the future. And the time of your decision is a twenty-four-hour cycle. Look inwardly if you wish, but never to the future—that way danger lies. Truth is not there, happiness is not there, certainty is not there. But the Word itself, the truth, the questioner, the great zero, which has dissolved each generation—all begins from the moment, and from there an endless line leads to the truth and happiness—continues in their lives.

Why are the morning occasions?—the day control the day. Seem to us not congenitally unhappy during the early hours, but the young man who lives up awakening that life is a burden is it how has been rendered, the mother

Or have been on much with Lady Nefiti this or looking with Raetia, or want of it, with the young Aphrodite—all "messengers of young providence" or "cultivated youth." To have a great outlook on life you want to be a man first. The one cannot be loved and loved without the other, and you must realize, with Kallio from EEE, the great truth that death and soul are eternally linked. With a bright spirit body you can start right, without those feelings of elation that or often, as Goethe says, make the morning's lay know what it is a better day.

ON THE USE OF THE MIND

Control of the word is a working problem; the education of it is better, so that its action becomes almost as automatic as walking, is the end of education—and yet how rarely reached! It can be accomplished with cultivation and repose, sure, with hurry and worry. . . . A

Two hours out of the glass, will adjust only let them be hours of dirty debilitation—in sound in order and in system, and day by day you will gain in power over the mental machinery, just as the child does over the spinal marrow in walking.

On the eve of the opening of the far Review, the owner and producer learns that some smart up-kits, proud to go on with the show. Their dilemma is solved, however, when they find out the springs pay off their backers at a rate 100% on the dollar, and covers all their former losses. This one of the smartest short-story, but at such a price, in particular, it's a very good idea. Well, keep on and keep on, and as a small collection of the

Wouldn't you like a color snapshot like this of your best girl?

New indoor outdoor Kodachrome film gives the most glorious color snapshots ever. And they're as easy to take as black-and-white!

You can take color snapshots just as warm and appealing as (but—this may offend!)—less expensive than black-and-white. You can capture the glory of those spring-time days, the happy times at home with family and friends. With new Kodachrome film, you can picture that old vibrant red interior—color so bold and so brilliant, you'll find it hard to believe that your camera caught it. And it's almost unbearably simple—just as easy as shooting in black-and-white. You use the same size of film as Kodachrome in any popular size snapshot camera. And you use the same roll with snapshots or film. One 135 of film, indoors and out. But get it now up to say that you really should try snapshots now Kodachrome film. You Kodak dealer will look after the processing for you.

The material, which clearly reflects a significant improvement in the quality of the work, is presented in the form of a book. The book is divided into two parts. The first part is devoted to the theory of the work, the second part is devoted to the practice of the work. The book is written in a clear and concise style, which makes it easy to read and understand. The book is a valuable source of information for all those who are interested in the work of the Ministry of the Interior.
